

“Chan writes with infectious exuberance, challenging Christians to take the Bible seriously.” - Publishers Weekly

As history has proven, no matter how secular Earth attempt to be, religion continues to persist in day to day living in some shape or form. The problem that many people face is how much of our life should we allow religion to influence. As our world continues to grow more into a secular lifestyle, it can be quite difficult to find where religion has its sense of purpose in our lives.

To love God is to know God. In this book, Francis Chan discusses the theological wonders of God through the beginning of the book- how God created distinct laughs for each person, the creation of e-minor, the changing of leaves. He leaves the reader in awe of the wide variety of things God has made for humans. Just at the beginning, readers grasp a key point Chan attempts to promote: that God carefully designed everything and every human for a specific reason, showing the fervent love God has poured out on us.

Christians today have become “lukewarm”; they lack a burning desire to explore their relationship with God, but if asked they would describe their selves as Christians. Is this how Christians are supposed to live? What is the purpose of being a follower of Christ if you do not yearn to grow closer? Francis Chan unravels the importance of diving into a deeper relationship with God in order to live an emotionally healthier lifestyle and better yourself.

Crazy Love explores the intense amount of love that the Creator of the Universe has for us, just mere humans. This insight will allow you to rediscover yourself through humility and recognize the tiniest of creative aspects God fabricated in people, objects, stars, galaxies, etc....
